Hands-on microcomputer training presents computer educators with a new set of opportunities and challenges. The opportunity for participants to interact with the machine and software in the presence of instructors markedly decreases the struggle many new computer users experience. Questions can be answered and instruction can be generalized in the context of actual problems encountered by participants. Our curriculum has included the basic operation of microcomputers and a variety of softwa ...

Grinnell College is a small, liberal arts college in the Midwest with a student population of approximately 1400. As technology pervaded classrooms and all faculty and staff members acquired their own computers, the Information Technology Services (ITS) division found ourselves wishing for a magical spell to impart users with knowledge and training. Accordingly, the department developed training classes. What a concept that was! For a while, there were many topics offered at varying times to acc ...

Research in end-user software training has not addressed the issue of designing methods to influence use of software. The research reported here is based on a field experiment that compared two software training methods for Lotus 1-2-3. Applications-based training was designed to be more personally relevant than construct-based training with the expectation that personal relevance would lead to higher levels of use. Self-reported hours of use by applications-based trainees were higher, alth ...

This paper describes the training sessions developed at Syracuse University Academic Computing Services to train the student consultants who work at one of five remote sites around campus. There are several different systems and many software packages which the consultants must also be familiar with. Most student consultants will choose to work at either a microcomputer or a mainframe s ...

Software training research indicates that some end-users do not subsequently transfer learned skills to their jobs. Yet, money, time and effort continue to be invested in formal software training. The three dimensional view presented in this article demonstrates that although the reasons for non-transfer are sometimes caused by trainee characteristics, software features, training approaches, the social context of work, and by the interaction between the four, training research generally foc ...

It is proposed that organizations better able to exploit information-related opportunities do so because their information systems groups provide a greater number of linking mechanisms through which end-user computing is motivated and facilitated. This study examines this notion. Interviews were held in 21 organizations to determine the extent to which 12 linking mechanisms were being used to facilitate 19 issues. An examination of the findings suggests that while the linking mechanisms are ...

Prior research has identified two psychological processes that appear to be used by programmers when they perform design and coding tasks: (a) taxonomizing—identifying the conditions that evoke particular actions; and (b) sequencing—converting the taxa into a linear sequence of program code. Three structured tools—structured English, decision tables, and decision trees—were investigated in a laboratory experiment to determine how they facilitated these two processes. ...

Rapid development in new information technology requires constant need for training end user. Organisations spend heavily on training, but do not take an integrative approach in formulating training strategies. This is mainly due to lack of guidance from the literature. A few frameworks that have been proposed have not been evaluated. In this paper, we use one such framework and use it to evaluate the training strategy in an organisation. This paper describes an operational system which can acquire the core meanings of words without any prior knowledge of either the category or meaning of any words it encounters. The system is given as input, a description of sequences of scenes along with sentences which describe the [EVENTS] taking place as those scenes unfold, and produces as output, a lexicon consisting of the category and meaning of each word in the input, that allows the sentences to describe the [EVENTS]. It is argued, tha ...

A universal input device for both text and Braille input was developed in a Glove-typed interface using all the joints of the four fingers and thumbs of both hands. The glove-typed device works as of now for input of Korean characters, numbers, and Braille characters using mode conversion. Considering the finger force and the fatigue from repeated finger motions, the input switch was made of conductible silicon ink, which is easy to apply to any type of surface, light, and enduring. 19 Is the effectiveness of formal end-user software training a mirage?

Conrad Shayo, Lorne Olfman

June 1993 Proceedings of the 1993 conference on Computer personnel research

Full text available:  pdf(1.08 MB) Additional Information: full citation, abstract, references, citations, index terms

Formal methods are perceived to play an important role in end-user software training and learning. However, evidence does not exist to support the effectiveness of formalized training on future use of the target software. This study uses qualitative research methods to explore the views of end-users with respect to the most recent formal software training session they attended. We use concepts from theories of self-regulation to generate questions and propositions that guide our analysis. G ...
